Electromagnetism light is part of an electromagnetic energy spectrum that includes radio waves, microwaves, infrared radiation, visible light, "light", ultraviolet x-rays, x-rays and gamma rays. Electromagnetic energy travels as waves ranging from wavelength. Radio waves and microwaves are located at the longest end of the electromagnetic energy spectrum (miles and meters from centimeters and millimeters), while X-rays and gamma rays have very short wavelengths (billion wavelengths (billion or trillions of metro). Infrared radiation, what we experience as heat when we hold your hand near a hot object, it is a bit more wavelengths of visible light. The visible light is simply electromagnetic radiation in one Range of wavelengths that our eyes are sensitive. Wave lengths visible range from 0.0007 millimeters for red light, through orange, yellow, green and blue, at 0.0004 millimeters for purple light. Ultraviolet is Over short wavelengths of Violet. Å, the electromagneticspectrum the electromagnetic spectrum is the distribution of electromagnetic radiation based on energy (or equivalent, by virtue of the reports in the previous section, based on Freq Unity or wavelength). Regions of the electromagnetic spectrum The following table provides approximate wavelengths, frequencies and energies for the selected regions of the electromagnetic spectrum. Spectrum of the Region of Electromagnetic Radiation Wave Region (Angstroms) Wavelength (centimeters) Frequency (Hz) Energy (EV) Radio> 109> 10
