Jquery auto submit form on select change.

In this short example, let us quickly see how to submit a form automatically, when the user selects a new item from the HTML Select/DropDown List `$(function () { $('#sel').live("change keyup", function () { $('#form1').submit(); }); });` Choose a Value HTML 5 jQuery 4 Ruby 3In this example, both the change and keyup event of the DropDownList is captured using live(). According to the W3C specifications, the change event occurs when a control loses the input focus and its value has been modified since gaining focus. However IE triggers the 'change' event as soon as the option is selected, whereas Mozilla, Chrome and Safari do not. This behavior of triggering the change event by IE on keyboard scrolling is not according to the W3C specs. This is the reason that we use both the change and keyup event to capture selection, when the user uses the keyboard to scroll through the dropdownlist items. Reload to refresh your session. Sometimes web users demand features that aren't standard in web user interfaces. One of those times is when the user wants a combo box (sometimes also called a combobox, a select box or selectbox) to automatically submit web forms when the current item in the combo box is changed. Figure 1: A live example of a standard submit button The standard way of submitting a web form is with a submit button (figure 1). As shown in this live example, the submit button has customized text that helps the user understand the purpose of the submit action. Users that want an automatically submitted web form are looking for a shortcut. They don't want to select a combo box item and THEN go through all the hassle of clicking on a submit button. Automatic combo box forms are particularly suited to the following situations: When there are a limited number of choices When the selection of any particular choice does not doom the user to an irreversible action. One example of that would be: "Are you sure you want to delete this transaction?". When the user is on an Intranet or on a fast Internet connection that does not have a significant turnaround time for processing the submitted page and refreshing the page (or rendering a new page). When there are few (or no) other form elements on the web page. Figure 2 shows a combo box that has been rigged to automatically submit when any of the combo box items are chosen. Figure 2: An example combo box that will automatically submit when an item is selected. The source code for Figure 2 is shown in Figure 3. All of the code in Figure 3 can be selected by clicking anywhere in the frame. Choose One Numbers Fruit Animals Rock Scissors Paper Hearts Diamonds Clubs Spades Figure 3: Source code for an example combo box. Click anywhere in the frame to highlight all of the text. Notes: The `onChange="frmTest.submit();"` select option is the magic that makes this work. Since this is in Javascript, the capitalization of the parameter is important. Notice that the capitalization of `frmTest` matches the name of the form. If the user does not have a Javascript enabled browser or the user wants to choose the default option, then this method will not work. Because either of those cases are common, the form should contain a SUBMIT button that forces the page to be submitted. The JavaScript code is surrounded by double quotes `"frmTest.submit();"`. This is part of the syntax for this method. It is very easy to forget to surround the parameter with quotes. Go Back to the WebApp Server and ASP Tips Page Other Popular DataFlex topics at The Database Managers, Inc.: Posted in JavaScript, PHP Author: Soumitra Leave a Comment on Submit form JavaScript onChange This tutorial example shows how to submit form automatically when a radio button is selected. The below example has two radio buttons and when one of them is selected then the form gets submitted automatically and displays the corresponding value. Sometimes you may need to submit the form automatically. Based on form submission, you may need to do some further processing. You can submit form automatically using events, such as, `onClick`, `onChange` JavaScript events which can be applied on many tags like `input type radio`, `input type checkbox`, etc. Code Implementation The following code is a combination of PHP, HTML and JavaScript that show how HTML form gets submitted automatically when a radio button is selected. `function autoSubmit() { var formObject = document.forms['dbForm']; formObject.submit(); } value="domestic" onChange="autoSubmit();" /> Domestic value="international" onChange="autoSubmit();" /> International` Once a radio button with value `domestic` or `international` is selected, the form gets submitted. The corresponding value is also displayed. Tagged: `onChange` Sure, but this is not really related to conditional fields (or even to contact form 7). All you have to do is trigger the submit event on the form with some JavaScript. Best place to find an answer to your question is probably stackoverflow. Thanks Jules! I am not very skilled with javascript and the folks over at stackoverflow haven't been particularly helpful. If there is a simpler way to do it with your plugin that's the direction I'd like to go. No, I'm sorry, you will definitely need to write some custom JavaScript for this. It's a pretty simple problem so shouldn't cost you too much if you want to hire a developer for this.
