To start using Gmail, you need to create a Google Account, which will allow you to sign into various Google services like YouTube and Google Drive. Before setting up your new account, make sure to log out of your current one to avoid any confusion. To begin, go to the Google Account login page on your device and click 'Create account'. You can choose whether your account is for personal or business use, selecting from options such as child, work, or a mix of both. The sign-up process will guide you through a series of steps to complete your account creation. Make sure to pick a unique username that isn't already in use or similar to an existing one. If the chosen username is taken or reserved by Google, you won't be able to create your account. Additionally, if someone has previously used it but deleted their account, it may still be unavailable.
