Freeman for my wife, woman and our daughter, Jenny. Á e á, ~" Charles A. Pack Page 7 Acknowledgments Writing a book is a complex and vast that it is difficult to know Where to start with the awards. I also hate writing this part because, frankly, someone always gets. That said, here we go. Thanks to my wife patient, Carrie, who sits me in front of me in the bedroom as I write. I'm sure she is tired of being a widow book / job. Thanks to my little bundle of joy, Amy, who is now 8 months old. She and Carrie both remind me of what is really important in the world every day. Thanks to my fantastic bigger children. It is so strange to have a child of 8 months and then for children aged 28 to 21 years. Thanks to all the people of Oracle with which I work, they are too many to appoint. Writing books are a long, complex and often frustrating task. Thanks to all the people of Sybex who participated in the realization of this book. Thanks especially to Jeff Kellum, which was my acquisition publisher, to get involved in this project. I worked with Jeff before my very strange book, and apparently didn't remember the pain that caused him pretty well, since he asked me to write this book anyway. Jeff endured a lot on this book. We really did the program something a joke, I'm afraid. Thanks to Tom Curtin, who tried so much to bring us back to the pointing program. Finally, a very important thank you comes out. Thank you for purchasing this book. Thank you for wanting to become a professional Oracle certified. Thank you for any cute comment you could leave for websites here and there. Thank you for confident to help you succeed in the test! Á e á, ~ "Robert G. Freeman thanks to Robert Freeman and Jeff Kellum for the opportunity to write this book. Thanks to my colleagues to CSX, some of the people who work brighter and more difficult I've never known, for Continue to challenge me continuously to remain technically sharp. This book would not have been written without my wife's permission, obviously. Thank you, Woman, for your support through these fun projects.
